Most websites look fine. Most websites leak.

A leaking website isn't broken — it just has gaps that cost you customers without anyone noticing. Someone finds you, clicks around for 20 seconds, and leaves. Not because they didn't need what you offer. Because something didn't work, didn't load, or didn't make it easy enough to reach out.

Go through this list. Check each one. Every item you can't check off is a place a potential customer is falling through the cracks.

HOW TO USE THIS

Work through each item on a phone, not a desktop. Most of your customers are on mobile. If something is hard to find or broken on your phone, it's costing you calls.

Part 1 — The Basics

01. Your phone number is visible without scrolling

Open your site on a phone. Can you see a phone number or 'Call Now' button immediately — before scrolling at all? If not, you're losing the people most ready to call.

02. Your phone number is clickable

Tap the number on your phone. Does it open your dialer automatically? If they have to copy and paste it, most won't bother.

03. Your site loads in under 3 seconds

Go to PageSpeed.web.dev and test your URL. A score below 50 on mobile means your site is likely losing visitors before they even see it.

04. Your site works on mobile

Scroll through every page on your phone. Is text readable without zooming? Do buttons work? Is anything cut off or overlapping?

05. Every link and button actually works

Click every button and link. 'Book Now,' 'Contact Us,' 'Get a Quote.' A broken link is a dead end for a potential customer.

Part 2 — The Leaks Most People Miss

06. Your contact form actually sends

Fill out your own contact form and submit it. Did you get the email? Broken contact forms are one of the most common silent leaks — the form submits but nothing arrives.

07. Your Google Business Profile is complete

Search your business name on Google. Does a profile appear? Is the address, phone number, and website correct? Is it marked 'Open' with current hours?

08. Your hours are accurate everywhere

Check your website, Google listing, and Facebook page. Do they all show the same hours? Conflicting info creates distrust and loses customers before they ever contact you.

09. You appear when someone searches your service in your city

Search '[your service] + [your city]' on Google. Does your business appear in the map results or the first page? If not, the leads go to your competitors instead.

10. Someone could contact you in under 30 seconds

Time yourself. From the moment you land on your homepage, how long does it take to find a way to reach you and actually do it? If it takes more than 30 seconds, it's too long.

How did you do?

9–10 checked	Solid foundation. Your digital presence is working. A growth layer — reviews, content, local SEO — is your next move.
6–8 checked	Leaks present. You're losing some customers to friction that's fixable. The gaps are costing you more than you think.
Under 6 checked	Foundation needs work. Your marketing spend is working against you right now. Every dollar you put into ads or social is going into a leaking bucket. Fix the foundation first.
